

Farmers Department.

The season for planting spring crops is rapidly advancing, and the farmer who is willing to do his work well, and trust the result to Providence, finds but little idle time. Corn planted prior to 10th of May, can generally be relied upon for a fair crop. The late heavy rains may to some extent have retarded operations, but in the end will be of great benefit to grass, wheat, oats and potatoes, all of which we are informed by our country friends look promising, and much more so, than for two years heretofore. Thus far we have had no blighting frosts to injure fruit or growing crops, yet of the former, there will not be that immense yield, that was at first anticipated. There will be enough to supply the demand at home, but little for export.

We learn that in view of the closing up of the war, some of our farmers are planting a less breadth than usual, fearing low prices and dull sales. This to some extent may be the case. Corn at $1, was above the average price. Should it decline one half, it would still afford a handsome profit. Below that it is not likely to go. The South is doing little in the planting line this season. Her population has been scattered far and wide. Loyal citizens have been driven from their homes, and their farms destroyed. For then it will require one season to place their farms in a condition to be cultivated. Meantime their food must come from some other quarter. It can not be produced in the South. Rebel planters will have to make themselves scarce in that section. They can no longer call over the roll of their slaves and by unrequited labor, exhaust the soil without benefitting the laborer. A year hence, all this will be changed. The South will raise enough to support her industrious population, but it can not be done in 1865. Therefore the farmers of the North must raise the provision necessary to support them this season. If the army as a body, should not consume the same amount of provisions, purchased by Commissaries and Quartermasters, yet that army in detached numbers will still exist, and for another year remain consumers instead of producers.

For these and many other reasons which must be apparent to every man of sense, we would urge the farmers of old Gallia, not to lay down the hoe, simply because Jeff. Davis has been compelled to flee from justice and as a necessary consequence our soldiers become private citizens again. Let every prudent farmer "crowd on sail," and get out every available man to plant his crop. Wages will probably decline one third before harvest. Your expenses of securing the crop will be greatly lessened. Labor will soon become abundant, at something like old prices.

Go to work as if you knew you would have old prices. Use every means in your reach. Work with judgment and decision. As to ultimate results, trust to that same good Providence, which has carried you through four years of war, and enabled you to live better, make more money, and be in easier circumstances to-day, than you probably would have been in twenty years of peace.

AN ELOQUENT EXTRACT.

The name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth shall dwell on the lips of faith throughout unborn generations. The structures man may raise under the successive forms of art—the granite warehouse, the marble palace, the sacred cathedral—shall disappear, the science, of which careful observers will collect the materials, and studious minds indicate the laws, shall undergo essential change; the philosophies which men will construct with great painstaking, and as they may think, with immortal success, shall be supplanted by new systems; the political institutions of empires and republics shall be modified by a wisdom that will look back on our times as but the dawn of a permanent civilization; kingdoms shall fall and nations be forgotten; but the Gospel of Christ shall survive all these changes. His name shall be dear to the millions that will overspread this Western Continent, or re-peopled the eastern hemisphere with new life, long after our virtues and our follies shall have been buried in oblivion. His authority shall be acknowledged by a believing and grateful world; and he shall reign till the end come," when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father," that "God may be all and in all."—Rev. Dr. Garnett.
